

SUMMARY OF THE INVENTION

The present invention refers to a fixture (device) and a method for manufacturing inflatable toys and balloons. This inflatable toy is made from a mylar or nylon or polyester or polypropylene film or one of similar polymers or laminations of these, preferably metalized. It is made from a rectangular section, which is folded lengthwise and, an adhesive tape is used on the tubular part, in order to give shape and structure to the toy, and a heat-sealing, which forms the conical tip and its variants.

- 5 The inflatable toy has the appearance of a space rocket, made from a mylar or nylon or polyester or polypropylene preferably metalized, because it is made up of a tubular cylindrical body closed at its top end, so that this part ends in a tip, so that once the toy is inflated, it is aerodynamic making it easier for the toy to fly and glide, the bottom end of the cylindrical body is found open so the toy can be inflated and at the same time be twisted to form a base, which permits the toy to bounce. Also, the tubular body is not heat-sealed, but only joined lengthwise by means of an overlap of its longitudinal ends, on which a special wide adhesive tape is placed, and which must be rubbed with pressure in order to be as airtight as possible. The tape should preferably be transparent and must remain without any creases or grooves. The cylindrical body can have corrugated, angular and helicoidal shapes.
